Understanding E-Cigarette Adoption and Marketing: A Social Media Study

This proposed interdisciplinary e-cigarette project will provide social media data-driven scientific findings and technology-driven informatics tools to address the FDA CTP research priorities concerning understanding of reasons for e-cigarette use, e-cigarettes' health effects and efficacy as a smoking reduction and cessation aid, and vendors' marketing practice and related stakeholders' response. An integrated Web-based social media informatics system, along with a live data collection dedicated to e-cigarette research, will provide much-needed information and situational awareness support to benefit CTP missions and regulatory work.

Social network analysis for health behaviors among Hispanic and Somali adults at risk for cardiovascular disease

The aims of this project are to conduct a social network analysis to identify community peer interventionists and assess existing social structures that contribute to health behaviors among Hispanic and Somali adults at risk for cardiovascular disease. This will inform the development of a sustainable, peer-delivered social network intervention to improve dietary behaviors in these populations

The overall goal of the Mayo Clinic CTSA is to continue to build a broad-based and integrated home for clinical and translational science (CTS) at Mayo Clinic that will ultimately improve human health. In this context, we seek to make the Mayo CTSA and the resources it leverages both an engine of efficiency for clinical and translational research and at the same time a driver of innovation. We also seek to integrate our local activities with consortium wide efforts directed at coordination and alignment.

Improving Access to Care Through the Establishment of a Local, Tele-Dermatology Network

This study utilizes a mixed-method, cross sectional design study focused on the implementation as well as refinement of tele-dermatology at a community partner clinical site. The specific aims include: 1) improve access to care through implementation of store and forward technology at a community partner clinical site, 2) educate community practitioners at the community partner clinical site on key areas in dermatology, and 3) create a local, volunteer referral network for dermatologic care in the greater Phoenix area.

Patient-Centered Approaches to Addressing Obesity in the Community: Acknowledging Stigma and Improving Primary Care

Utilizing a mixed-method, cross-sectional design, this project aims (1) to assess quantitatively the current quality of obesity counseling in primary care at two Mayo-supported community clinics with attention to disparate processes of care, and (2) conduct in-depth, qualitative assessments to describe experiences with weight management for diverse obese patients seeking care at these community-based clinics located in FL & AZ. The long-term objectives are to inform the translation of evidence-based guidelines into patient-centered approaches to weight management and the development of multi-media interventions targeting care delivery and outcomes for at risk patients in community settings.

Somali Tobacco Outreach & Research Initiative (STORI)

This community-based, mixed methods study employing quantitative surveys and qualitative focus groups will assess tobacco use behaviors, perceptions, and barriers to cessation. Healthcare access and clinical service utilization will also be assessed in order to inform future reduction and cessations studies. Social networks will be examined in relation to accessing information about health and tobacco use. Long term objectives related to this study are the development of community-based interventions for tobacco use prevention, reduction, and cessation tailored to reduce disparities related tobacco use among the Somali community.

Knowledge Integration in Quitlines: Networks that Improve Cessation

The proposed study is to better understand the network and communications mechanisms by which stakeholders in an existing and well-defined tobacco control network interact, share new evidence, make decisions on how and when to implement new knowledge, and actually adopt practices that they believe will improve quitline outcomes.
